Find out about 13 apprenticeship subjects at the RUAG TalentsDay

Berne, 7.10.2016. Training the next generation of employees is a high priority for the international technology group RUAG. As of mid-October, RUAG will be offering insights into 13 apprenticeship occupations available across ten different Swiss locations. At the RUAG TalentsDay, the doors will be wide open to anyone interested in vocational training and apprenticeships.

At the RUAG Talents Day, young people along with their friends and families will be able to obtain a complete picture of the career options available and of RUAG as a place to do an apprenticeship. Registration is required at www.ruag.com/talentsday

At present, RUAG is training approximately 350 trainees in 15 different jobs in Switzerland. This corresponds to about 10% of RUAG's total payroll in Switzerland. Most of the vocational trainers at RUAG work full time and devote all their energies to this demanding task.

RUAG offers comprehensive, practice-oriented basic training. 90% of the vocational trainers are also examination experts. This ensures they can prepare the trainees specifically for the specialist knowledge and skills required in the examinations.
